INTRODUCTION

THE texts from Nuzi (near Kirkuk, Iraq) published in this volume were selected from the fifteen hundred tablets dating from about 1500 B.C. that were brought to light by the Harvard-Baghdad School Expedition under the direction of Professor Edward Chiera in 1927-28. In Volume V of the Harvard Semitic Series (1929) Dr. Chiera published 107 of these tablets, selected from the four hundred that he had catalogued; all of them were found in Room 34 of House A, and belonged to the families of Zigi and Ilanu. In this volume Nos. 97-120 and 154-157 were found in the same room (from which came also Nos. 3, 27, and 94) and belong to the same families, the publication of whose archives is thus brought substantially to a close.

With the exception of Nos. 23 and 81 (which came to light in the great palace of Nuzi, or House C), all the tablets published in this volume were found in House A. Rooms 23 and 26 of House A, which yielded most of them, seem to have been the offices in which Shilwateshub kept his records. Twenty of his memoranda about flocks come from Room 23 (only two from Room 26), together with six records of transactions in grain and six miscellaneous contracts. Room 26 seems to have been the principal office: in it were found twenty-seven records of transactions in grain, four mortgages, seven records of lawsuits, a letter, and a dozen miscellaneous contracts; in addition to these documents belonging to Shilwateshub, three royal letters (including the one of Saushshattar) and three of the four tablets of Hishmi-Teshub son of the king. Rooms 11, 13, 14, 15, and 30 of House A yielded from one to seven of the tablets published here.

In addition to the tablets from Room 34 supplementing the book of Dr. Chiera, this volume contains the records of kings (1-3 5-6) and of sons of kings (Hishmi-Teshub, 93-96, and Shilwateshub, 4-92 and 121-153; Shilwateshub from the country Hanigalbat in No. 23 seems to be another person, and No. 56 is doubtful). In texts from Nuzi previously published, sons of the king were occasionally mentioned among the witnesses: Teshshuya appears as such eight times in Chiera's Declarations in Court (Joint Expedition with the Iraq Museum at Nuzi, Vol. II) and four times in Volume V of this series; in one tablet of the latter volume (71, 46-48) in conjunction with two other princes, Urkhiya and Ni'riya (the latter is also named in SMN 549). [Ha]niashu(?) and Hubita appear once in Chiera's Inheritance Texts (Joint Expedition . . ., Vol. I), Masa-Adad and Mukriya once in his Declarations in Court. But Shilwateshub and Hishmi-Teshub are the only Nuzi princes of whom something is known besides their names.

Shilwateshub is the most important citizen of Nuzi of whom we have any information; he ranks above others on account of his royal lineage, his wealth, his commercial activities, and his elaborate household and staff. We know the names of two of his wives, Nashmunnaia (Harvard Semitic Series, Vol. V, No. 66) and Shashuri; of a sister, Shuwarkhepa; and of two sons, Naite and Shilakhi. His household servants, his office assistants, his farm hands, and his shepherds were very numerous; he even had a bodyguard of ten men to protect his life on the battle field. His servant Pai-Teshub seems to have been his chief clerk, and transacted business for himself as well as for his master; a number of other servants and even a handmaid of Shilwateshub did likewise. It appears from his extant records that Shilwateshub was rich in flocks, herds, and horses, and possessed vast fields of barley and other grains and groves of trees from which beams were obtained; his commercial activities consisted chiefly in the administration of his landed estates, in the care of his flocks and herds, and in the business of loaning for a fee grain, beams, bricks, and horses. Like other men in his day he was not seldom involved in litigation, but there is no evidence indicating that he ever lost a lawsuit.

In order to make this volume as far as possible a comprehensive publication of the royal letters, of texts pertaining to sons of the king, and of the archives represented in the previous volume, many texts in a fragmentary condition had to be included. Some of these, and a few tablets belonging to groups abundantly represented among the autographed texts in this volume, have been published in transliteration (121-157), according to the system of F. Thureau-Dangin (Le Syllabaire Akkadien). It is hoped that even in this form these fragments may yield to the reader whatever information they contain on the life and civilization of the ancient Hurrians living in Nuzi.
